Good Science!

4th Osnabrück Symposium on Good Scientific Practice

On October 8th, 2020, the University of Osnabrück is holding its fourth symposium on good scientific practice. All doctoral candidates and postdocs, all professors and lecturers and students at Osnabrück University are cordially invited to participate.

The conference will focus on the following questions:

- What is »good science«? What rules of good scientific practice must be observed when dealing with data and sources and when publishing research results?
- What is scientific misconduct? Where are the boundaries between scientific misconduct, technical errors and questionable scientific practice?
- What can I do if I suspect someone of scientific misconduct?

The symposium will start with an introductory interdisciplinary lecture on »Guidelines for Good Scientific Practice«. Afterwards, three parallel workshops for postdocs, doctoral students and master students are planned, which will deal with topics such as »Dealing with Data and Sources« and »Publication Process and Authorship« from the perspective of different disciplines. Finally, a concluding interdisciplinary workshop will discuss the question of how to proceed in cases of suspected scientific misconduct.

Language

The conference language is mainly German. A handout in German and English will be provided for the introductory lecture. Workshop 2: »Publish or Perish? Handling Data in Science and Mathematics« will be held in English. Questions can be asked in English in all parts of the program.
