During the summer semester, all seminars and lectures will in principle be held online.

Even if the authorities at the city, Land and national level decide to relax their guidelines on social distancing and hygiene, it will still be possible to complete these courses online.
In brief:

Practical lab work and experiments can still take place if permission is granted and documented by the relevant dean’s office and the work is undertaken in accordance with the strict safety guidelines which have been made known across the university.
In brief:

The scheduled times of the courses and students’ compulsory attendance in the courses remain unchanged despite the online course format. Students may not suffer any disadvantage from not attending a class.
Any outstanding on-campus examinations from the previous winter semester will take place at a later date as a matter of priority in accordance with the safety guidelines which are already widely known.
Examinations scheduled for the summer semester should take place with a minimum of contact between examinees. Examinations requiring examinees to attend in person will be scheduled for the end of the semester in accordance with the guidelines on social distancing and hygiene which are valid at the time; this means that they can take place later, in smaller groups or in different formats. To this end, a centralized examination schedule is being drawn up under the direction of the VPSL.
In brief:

With the exception of cases which are de facto impossible (e.g. due to travel bans), doctoral examinations as well as lectures for habilitation procedures both require the doctoral or post-doctoral candidates to be physically present at the university, subject to the university’s guidelines on social distancing and hygiene. The members of the doctoral or habilitation committee and members of the university community should participate virtually as far as possible.
Decisions on how to conduct examinations and courses are to be taken in the first instance by the deans (or academic deans, where applicable), who document these decisions in an appropriate manner (e.g. seating plans, etc.) and bring them to the attention of the VPSL (the VPSL reserves the »right of veto«). The responsibility for carrying out examinations and courses in accordance with the regulations lies with the respective examiners or lecturers.
In brief:

In order to guarantee the appropriate implementation of the guidelines on social distancing and hygiene at examinations and in courses, it is necessary to consult D6 and, where necessary, the university medical officer. As things currently stand, there is a two to three week waiting period for this process.
In brief:

The university buildings will remain closed until regular teaching activities resume. A decision to open the university buildings will be made no earlier than June 1st, 2020, in accordance with the guidelines on social distancing and hygiene in force at the time as issued by the authorities in the city of Osnabrück, in the state of Lower Saxony and at national level.
In brief:

In the areas of the university which are open and accessible, the obligation to wear a face covering and the obligation to maintain a minimum distance of 1.5 meters to the next person will continue to apply until revoked.
